

ANGLICARE AUSTRALIA PROVENANCE PROJECT 2014

PROVENANCE PROJECT

INTRODUCTION

*Noun: place or source of origin; from the Latin próveníre – to come forth*

The idea for this resource came as we were thinking about what it means to apologise. In 2009, the Rudd government offered an apology to Forgotten Australians – children and young people abused and neglected in Australian institutional care. Previously similar apologies for their part in this had been offered by individual Diocese of the Anglican Church and by the National Anglican Church as well as by many Anglicare Australia members.

What did such an apology mean to Anglicare Australia we wondered, and how could we give life to that apology. The result is this Provenance Project.

One thing we learnt from those who lived in these institutions was how difficult it could be for them or their descendants to find out where they had lived. Further, if they had been abused, or simply wished to retrieve and view their records, changes in the ownership of organisations could make it difficult to know where to look or who to ask. This resource is designed to make those first stages easier for those who lived in homes run by agencies that are members of Anglicare Australia or their antecedent organisations.

As you look through this resource you will see that there were once many small organisations and homes. As time has moved on, as society has asked more for a more professional approach to these services, many of the smaller homes have folded or merged into other entities. Like any family tree the details can become opaque as we look deeper into time. We hope this project makes the history clearer.

Of course not everyone who lived in these homes will have solely unhappy memories. It is hoped that this resource can be useful there too as people seek reunions with other children, or more knowledge about their roots.

Our sincere gratitude goes to Judi Cleary, a social historian with an empathy and knowledge of the Anglicare network, for her patient and tireless work.

*Kasy Chambers
Executive Director
Anglicare Australia*

PROVENANCE PROJECT

METHODOLOGY OF PROJECT

The final database was compiled from information provided by Anglicare Australia agencies through a survey conducted in March/April 2014.

Agency details; information on earlier care providers; location and storage of records past and present; and the steps by which inquirers can gain access to their personal records were collated from survey responses into a document covering agencies that have provided care for children in the past and/or the present.

The information was cross-referenced with the Federal Government's Find & Connect website to determine which former care providers have entries on that website. Many were found to have information and contact details that could prove useful to inquirers in conjunction with speaking directly to the current Anglicare Australia agency responsible for the records being sought.

In addition to the Find & Connect website, 'For the Record' by James Boyce (Anglicare Australia, 2003) contains a comprehensive directory of many Anglican agencies and missions that provided care for children from 1830 to 1980, in particular, Indigenous children and British and Maltese child migrants. While some directory details are out-dated, much of the background information and sources provided by Boyce could still be a useful historical context for current Anglicare Australia agencies.

Appendices to the report include an alphabetical listing of current and past agencies that have provided care for children as well as a list of all current Anglicare Australia member agencies.

Every endeavour has been made to confirm the accuracy of the information in this database. If there are errors or omissions, please notify Anglicare Australia on 02 6230 1775 or anglicare@anglicare.asn.au

As James Boyce said in 2003, the most important task for agencies is enabling former residents to access information. All agencies and the Anglican Church have a duty to streamline the process for those seeking information. It is hoped that this updated directory of Anglicare Australia agencies will be a useful step in that process.
